Psychology of Gangs.

From the New York Medical Journa Block has examined 100 members of gangs and compared these young men with Columbia freshmen. Gang is the well known designation give to a company or band of young men acting to gether for a disreputable purpose Although he cites many authors. Block does not give a definition of a gang. He notes the marked inferiority in accuracy, memory, hearing and tactile sensation in contrast to the Columbia freshmen. The gangs have in their favor on eyesight, speed, and estimation of time, and if a large number of subjects is taken different results may be obtained. When the their facul tles. as memory and accuracy, are taken into account the students are by far superior.
